

My Children and the Snow

The snow is fascinating for us adults as much as for children. My children are not an exception. They enjoy walking on it and grabbing some every time they are outside trying to take some of that white element inside the house. Sometimes they ask for someone to clean their hands because they are too cold already, by showing their hands to me or to my husband.

In the future we would like to take them to a small hill covered with snow so they can slide down there. We will have to wait to do that activity because the boys are still too young to control their weight on the sleds and in case they fall, to know how to avoid a bad hit. I look forward to enjoying each season with my two treasures in many ways.

The Winter and Summer Story

I like winter because there are fun things to do like building a snow woman. She should have some flair to her. She should have big purple fake ruby eyes, a big pink ruby for her nose, and a fake diamond mouth. She should wear a long red and green dress with sequins on it. The dress is a Christmas dress. She has long brown hair. You look at her, and you would think that she looks like a fashion model.

In winter time you can have more fun by sledding down a hill as fast as the sled will take you. You get cold and have some hot chocolate to warm your inside. Snowmobiling with friends is always fun. Some people don't like winter because they don't like when it gets cold, and the mess the kids bring in with their wet dirty boots and too much snow.

Summer time at the beach is fun. Taking your kids to the beach is fun just because you like the way their faces light up when you tell them you're all going to the beach. Making sand castles with your kids is fun, taking kids on picnics is fun too. Some people like to lay out in the sun to get a tan. Summer time is so pretty with all the flowers. The air smells so good with the smell of people cooking out. Some people don't like summer because they think it's too hot, others don't like it because of their allergies.
